PROVIDING SECURITY AND DEFENDING A VITAL SERVICE

This week we celebrate National Postal Workers' Day where we acknowledge and thank our members working in every function and business unit in Royal Mail Group, including Parcelforce and fleet, for the vital role they play in delivering the USO six days a week to 29 million addresses.

The CWU is proud to highlight the work and dedication of our members and the important role they carry out in supporting UK communities. This year's National Postal Workers' Day is particularly relevant given our current dispute and the recent spell of bad weather which provided a timely opportunity to focus management's attention on the role and value of their employees operating in all weathers during the busy Christmas pressure period.

Further talks with the business have continued this week on Pay and the Four Pillars campaign and we continue to closely monitor progress. We have reminded Royal Mail Group that we are still in dispute and we will not hesitate to serve notice for industrial action if we suspect, at any moment, that we are losing impetus or that progressive talks have stalled or are going backwards.

This is a defining moment in our campaign and we are determined to secure the right Agreement that affords employment, standard of living and retirement security for all our members while protecting the future of an important and cherished public service.

YOU PICKED THE RIGHT SIDE

THIS DISPUTE IS FAR FROM OVER, WE WILL CONTINUE CAMPAIGNING
